Stay in play

An easy way to improve your aim

Only golf test robots hit it dead straight every time. Yet many golfers begin every hole trying to do just that. This leads to dropped shots, higher scores and less fun. Dispersion patterns are easy to determine and once you understand them, you'll know where to aim to minimise your risk of landing in hazards or out of bounds.

100

Not sure what your dispersion pattern is? Let's get on the range and find out.

Discover your dispersion >

"Your dispersion pattern is the area that you usually land the ball. It makes club selection a lot simpler and improves your aim. For instance, when you know that you land your driver within a 40-metre area (dispersion), you'll have a much better idea of where to aim to give yourself the best chance of scoring. This applies through the bag."

Give yourself the best chance of scoring

A more enjoyable golf experience isn't only about improving your swing. Knowing how you usually hit each club in your bag makes a huge difference. We'll arm you with the knowledge to aim better and score lower.

More time for golf

Up to three hours a day

Most of the changes we've had to adapt to in 2020 have been unpleasant and stressful. But there is one silver lining. Time.

Many people now have more time before and after work. Some of our golfers are saving themselves two 60-minute daily commutes. That's two hours a day. We can play a lot of golf in that time.

This is so much more than just a range session. This is us and a small group of golfers spending an hour practising together with a common purpose. It's an opportunity to share ideas and feedback. Any advice for one, is advice for everyone, so you can fast-track your improvement.
