Hello summer!

Finally, we should get to have summer – albeit all-in-one week!

Here are some snaps of the course taken last week...

Hollow-tining

You might not like it, but the hollow-tining of our greens is an essential part of golf course maintenance.

What is hollow-tining?

It's the removal of cores of turf from the greens, leaving holes of about 13-16mm in diameter and of varying depths. Once done, sand is applied to the surface to fill in the holes.

Why is it done?

In a nutshell, over time the greens become compacted and hard which makes drainage less efficient and the grass's roots are prevented from absorbing oxygen. Hollow-tining allows the turf to expand and air and moisture to be more easily absorbed. In effect it de-thatches the greens and allows for the exchange of poor soil with better soil through top dressing.

It's done at this time of the year because the bent grass is at its peak and poa annua, which we have a lot of, is at its weakest. So this is a good time to encourage more bent grass growth on our greens.

Rudi Bosch, who oversees the Matkovich Course Maintenance team at Zwartkop, gives you the low-down in these videos:

Why we hollow-tine and what they have done here at Zwarties

The hollow-tine machine in action

Why they put sand over the greens after hollow-tining

Take a look at these two pictures of how it was done in the past – boy how times have changed...
