Feedback from the Golf Course

The greens have been sanded and they have started the overseeding. The gentle rain received so far has been a tremendous help with getting this absorbed and of course the nitrogen in the rain will help green up the grass too.

Let us help you play better golf

In this week's golf tip, Adam Lowther takes you through all the steps required to chip off a tight lie.

Adam Lowther is an Assistant Teaching Professional at Zwartkop.

Make golf your Valentine

Fall in love with golf

Valentine's Day might be about celebrating romantic love, but we think it's also a great opportunity to fall in love with golf.

3 reasons to love golf

Quality time

What's better than a few hours sharing a common passion with the special people in your life? It could be your partner, children, grandchildren or friends, or all of them.

Self-care

Aside from the fact that walking 18 holes burns over a thousand calories, you're also out in nature, unplugged from electronic devices and away from notifications, news feeds and stress.

Eternal hope

You could hack through the rough on your way to the green, but save a shot by holing a 30-footer and it was all worth it.

There's always the next shot, the next hole, the next round to look forward to. There's always a chance something special could happen.

Write your love letter to golf

Let us know what you love about this wonderful game and we'll help you experience it more often.

So you want the best feel you can get at impact without compromising on distance and accuracy? Then you should try the new Srixon Soft Feel Golf Ball.

Find your fit

What's your ideal spin rate?

Happy with your swing but not your distance? Struggling with ballooning drives or a stubborn slice? Excess spin might very well be the culprit. While there is no ideal spin rate that applies to all golfers, we find that many golfers are launching the ball too low with too much spin. This is the ultimate distance-killing combo.

Fast swings generating high ball speed benefit from a spin rate of about 2,500-2,700 revolutions per minute (rpm) with driver, to prevent the ball from ballooning and losing carry.

Slower swings need a driver spin rate of about 2,900-3,000 rpm to get their drives airborne and increase hangtime for more carry.

Before we can help you reach your full distance potential, we'll need to do a fitting benchmark to find out if the amount of spin you're generating is appropriate for your swing speed and launch angle. Then we can make the right adjustments to your loft, shaft flex and attack angle.

Fit for further

No matter what your skill level is, to achieve your full distance potential, your spin rate and launch angle must align with your swing speed. Let's make sure yours does.
