From the Club

Whoop whoop!

Our official Guinness World Certificate has finally arrived! We will have the certificate framed and put up in the clubhouse for all to see.

Once again huge congratulations to the team that secured our World Record for the fastest 18-holes of golf – we did it in 11 minutes & 55.32 seconds.

We might have to start practising for a repeat performance as we have already heard on the wires that another club across the World wants to have a go at beating our record.

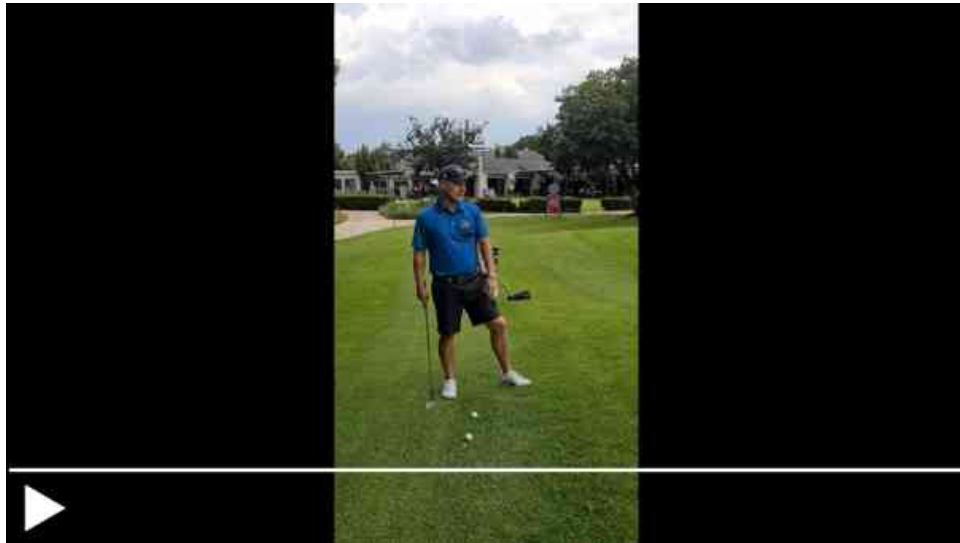

Stars of the Week

Congratulations to Lea van der Merwe, who is one of the newly selected inductees into the GolfRSA Women's National Squad for 2023 and to William Skinner who has been selected for the GNGU Super Senior Team for the IPT to be played at San Lameer in April.

Let us help you play better golf

In this week's golf tip, Duane takes a detailed look at your short game and gives you good advice on chipping off an uphill and downhill lie, and with the ball below and above your feet.

Duane Keune is the Head Teaching Professional at Zwartkop.

Make golf your Valentine

Bringing you closer together

Picture this: you're strolling across sprawling, grassy hills, the late afternoon sun caressing your skin while you're deep in conversation with your significant other. No, this isn't an evening stroll in the park, it's an approach walk to the green during a round of couples golf.

Whether it's keeping an existing relationship strong, or forming a completely new relationship, golf gives you the perfect space and time to build special connections.

To get the most out of golfing with your significant other, it helps to not have the same expectations you would have for a solo round or a round with your golf buddies. Couples golf is a different experience, and if you go into it with the right mindset, it could be a massive breath of fresh air into your golfing life as well as your personal life.

Suited to a tee

Just like you and your partner, golf and social connection go hand-in-hand.

Why not book a round of couple's golf and let the sparks fly?

Find your fit

Where the problem lies

You could have the perfect launch angle and spin rate for your swing speed and strike the ball with the ideal attack angle, but if your lie angle is out, you're going to struggle with accuracy.

For a straight trajectory with your irons, you need to square the club face at impact. And it's a lot easier to do this if your lie angle is correct. When it's too upright, the club face is more likely to close at impact and pull/hook your shot. When it's too flat, the club face is more likely to open at impact and push/slice your shot.

Lie angle has a greater impact on launch direction with higher lofted clubs. To create more scoring opportunities, you need to be able to rely on your scoring clubs.

During an iron fitting, in addition to checking your lie angle with every iron in your bag, we'll also benchmark your face angle at impact and your trajectory shape. This information enables us to make the necessary adjustments to improve your iron accuracy and strike consistency.

Let's establish your benchmark

This should be standard

There is no standard for lie angle in golf club manufacturing. Brand A's 'standard' lie angle isn't the same as brand B's 'standard' lie angle. That means getting your new clubs fitted has to be the standard.

Your playing partners might look at your rough lie and assume you'll be dropping shots. But they don't know what you can do with the new Cleveland RTX 6 ZipCore in your hands.
